Mn. Entron-Sin: I notice that the Advertises sees another comet. The astronomical editor of that paper is probably the same as the one that lately saw Jupiter in the evening sky long after that planet had disappeared into preximity to the sun. He turned his telescope (a looking-glass) upon Venus, and saw thereto "four moons." He there fore proclaimed it Jupiter, and kindly informed us of its diameter. Now, I wish to ask him, through you, whether he, or my other man, has seen that 'nebulous star" he calls a comet. If so, in what part of the somewhat extensive "western heavens." There are several brilliant nebulous clusters to b seen in that direction, which an ordinary spy-glaswill resolve into stars. But those were there before Adam with Eve did thereupon hold sweet discourse. PARALLAX.
